These projects involved leveraging extensive datasets, implementing state-of-the-art CNN architectures, and optimizing the models for accuracy and efficiency By training these models on large-scale image databases, I have been able to achieve impressive results in automated diagnosis and early detection. In addition to my expertise in skin cancer and tumor detection, I possess a solid understanding of various other domains within Machine Learning, including natural language processing, predictive modeling, and anomaly detection.